

theoretical probability

For a single event, the theoretical probability is calculated by dividing the number of favorable outcomes by the total number of possible outcomes.