

On a warm day, the particles of the liquid in the outdoor thermometer move faster and spread out.

On a cold day, the particles of the liquid move slower and take up less space.